If you are like many lawyers, you excelled in arts-related disciplines as an undergraduate. Sociology, Psychology or Political Science; Commerce; Philosophy and critical thinking; and then, of course: you earned a degree in the Law.

But science, perhaps, not so much; Organic Chemistry - zilch; Pharmacology - nope; Gas Chromatography - I don’t think so...

Now, you find yourself in the position where not only do you need to have mastery of this information, but your client’s future depends upon your ability to not only understand the material, but explain it to a jury.

Don’t worry - you are not alone.

Our editor is an internationally established expert who has testified in more than 150 jury trials. Counterpoint articles are created by noted content experts. But, unlike other science journals, the material is presented in clear language, in a readily understandable format, and at a pace that will increase your science literacy over time. Making complex ideas clear is our business...

More importantly, the articles are designed so that a comprehensive curriculum arc is completed in each Volume of four Issues.
